THE IMPORTANCE OF SPC

SPC, better known as Statistical Process Control, is a procedure that can be used to monitor the behaviors of various processes. With clearly defined parameters, the observation of the processes used to manufacture your product could prove to be very valuable to your company.

Data collection from a particular process, in conjunction with the use of a control chart, can provide a picture of whether or not a particular process is suffering from any process variation. Identification of process variation will allow your company to react and find the root cause of the variation, and figure out how to eliminate it from affecting the process moving forward.

If you think you could benefit from the use of Statistical Process Control to monitor your processes within your company, Incrementum Quality Solutions can help implement a SPC program to ensure that you are aware of process variations that you could be experiencing. Please contact Incrementum Quality Solutions for additional information about Statistical Process Control.

QUALITY TOOL SPOTLIGHT

Pareto Chart

What is a Pareto Chart? A Pareto Chart is a quality tool that can be used for Quality Control by....

- Tracking defects
- Identifying the frequency of defects
- Using it in a Pareto Analysis (80/20 Rule)
- Identifying Continuous Improvement opportunities

These are just a few things that a Pareto Chart can assist a company with when they are in need of making a calculated decision.

For Pareto Chart training please contact Incrementum Quality Solution to set-up a training session for this and other quality tools.
